The Last Sad Elles Over the Remains of Fred Jones-An Explanation Which Makes ills Death the Result of an Aceldent.

The funeral services over the remains of he late Fred Jones were held yesterday at p. m., at the First Baptist church. There was present a large crowd composed of the many friends of the unfortunate young man, his father, F. B. Jones of Canon City. Colo., and relatives in the city. The cere mony was attended with more than the

Mr. F. B. Jones, the father of the unfortunate boy is well known by a number of the leading citizens who refer to him in a most complimentary way. He has the deepest sympathy of friends in his sorrow. Three years ago his wife, a most estimable lady, died and Fred was the only child, and to him, as would be quite natural, the father looked with ever watchful care. Just a few minutes before he received the dispatch on Thursday, evening last that his son had died suddenly he read a letter from him which was full of hope for the future, and stated be was glad vacation had ended and school commenced. He hoped he would, by the time school closed, be able to be of some assistance to his father.

Those most familiar with the family and who knew Fred most intimately insist with most earnest convictions that be never committed suicide intentionally. He was subject to fainting spells which come on often from over exertion. He was much was frequently used as a lasso to catch the dog, chickens or anything that attracted the attention of a playful boy. He would often make swirgs with the rope and to attach himself in many ways. The explanation which alone is accepted by the acquaintances is that the boy was playing in the out building with the rope as he was accustomed to, and in some way the rope slipped around his neck and while in this position he fainted. To those who were acquainted with him, his pranks and every-day life, this is the only explanation

Dr. Stevenson ordered the schools closed in time to allow teachers and pupils to attend the funeral services yesterday. Many of them availed themselves of the opportunity and nearly all the playmates of the ed were present.
